Biography

I am British-born, holding dual citizenship from Australia, and I have been living in Hong Kong since 2011. I've just concluded a year's teaching contract with City University, where I am now also in the final semester of my MFA in Creative Writing (poetry).

I hold a BA Honours (First Class) in English and Creative Writing from Murdoch University in Western Australia, and a BA Honours (2:1) in English and Drama from the University of Kent, UK.

My professional career has spanned local government, performing arts, PR and the cultural non-profit sector. For the past four years I have also worked as a freelance writer and editor.

My work has appeared in various publications in Australia and Asia. In 2011, Sunline Press published my book of poetry, The Weather of Tongues, which subsequently won the Anne Elder Award, given annually by the Fellowship of Australian Writers for a debut collection.

About DSpace

Welcome to OAPS

The University of Macau Library has partnered with some premier universities in the world to establish the Outstanding Academic Papers by Students (OAPS) project. The main purpose is to encourage our students to carry out quality research work by collecting and preserving these works in digital format in the library website. The papers now in the database are from students in various faculties in the University and the number of these papers will increase gradually in the years to come.

This is a digital installation of DSpace!

It can be extended and configured by our modified JSPs, altering the site configuration.

Title: Talking as communicators: Effects of perceived media importance, group communication, and government-citizen interaction on online political discussion

Authors: Liu, Na (劉麗)

Department: Department of Media and Communication

Issue Date: 2012

Course: COM8007 Multivariate Analysis in Communication Research

Programme: Doctor of Philosophy in Media and Communication

Instructor: Prof. Zhu, Jonathan

Citation: Citation: Liu, N. (2012). Talking as communicators: Effects of perceived media importance, group communication, and government-citizen interaction on online political discussion (Outstanding Academic Papers by Students (OAPS)). Retrieved from City University of Hong Kong, CityU Institutional Repository.

Abstract: Most early research on political discussion emphasizes the effects of media use and peer citizen communication on frequency of political discussion. Differing from that, this study makes two distinctions to the research on predicting online political discussion. First, it provides major support for a new theoretical model accounting for the relationship among online political discussion, perceived importance of new media, group communication, and government-citizen online interaction. Second, it emphasizes two overlooked factors that influence political discussion: one is the direct interaction between individual citizen and the state; the other is the cognitive aspect of media use—perceived media importance—in political discussion. By applying structural equation modeling to analyze the data from 2008 Civic Engagement of Pew Internet & American Life Project, this study reveals that both the perceived importance of new media and government-citizen online interaction have positive effects on the frequency of online political discussion.
